FRAGRANT WATERS' MURMUR That Captain Vessy's death was perhaps the saddest incident in the gloomy week of Plague experience now closing.

That Vesey died as nobly as if he had fallen in the front of a forlorn hope, but the regret of the community over his loss was none the less profound.

That it is a source of sincere pleasure to know that the other patients, from the Shropshire search-parties, are making rapid progress toward recovery.

That this week will be long remembered for its threatened panie among the Chinese, and for what may now be called the epidemic dimensions of the Plague.

That residents of a hopeful disposition even now apeak lightly of the comparatively small percentage of cases to the mass of the Chinese population.

That, all the same, the situation is serious enough, and the comparative helplessness of medical science in dealing with the disease adds to the uncertainty and vague dread of the scourge.

That I fancy the serious, but fortunately temporary increase in the number of cases must be due to the hasty turning up of the poison in the filthy rockeries without the precaution of disinfecting before and during the cleansing process.

That regrettable experiences must be gone through in such times of emergency, and a most commendable desire has been shown by the Sanitary and Executive powers that be to accept suggestions from all sides.

That even the initial mistake of giving the Chinese charge of their sick has perhaps led, or may lead, to good results, as comparisons are now being made by the natives with the English and Chinese management of hospitals-of nursing and medical treatment.

That the object lesson supplied by the Kennedy Town Hospital, where the lady nurses have been doing very plucky work since the outbreak of the Plague, will do more than anything else could to disperse the wretchedly erroneous notions of the Chinese.

That the medical men of the Colony have been working like Trojans, and they have been ably assisted by Dr Horder and others.

That arrangements having been made for . . the patients in the Alice Memorial and Nethersole Hospitals, the staff of those institutions (under Dr T. J. Burton) has entered the field in the Kennedy Town Matched Hospital.

That the descriptions of the Glass-works | Bischoff Receiving House which have reached me are very much worse than that given by Mr Granville Sharp.

That while the Hospital in Kennedy Town Police-Station is spoken of as an abode-ofpeace, order, and cheerfulness, the Glass-Works Receiving House is spoken of with Pollock... horror as a kind of inferno.

That the attendance, or rather the utter want of attendance, is the worst feature of what goes by the name of Chinese management there.

That if the native population learn from this experience ever so little of the true methods of caring for the sick, something will have been accomplished, and the pestilential cloud may not be altogether without its silver lining. That I see you have been very amphatic in your advice to the Governor, to take the bull by the home, and to do whatever will put out and keep out this Plague from the Colony,

That the Governor, I hear, will make a statement on Monday as to the policy he intends to adopt, and until then it is perhaps unnecessary to anticipate events. That the worst houses in the worst district are to be thoroughly disinfected, and closed, is generally known. That they are to be burnt, or demolished, or both, appears to be as yet unsettled, but that some remodelling process is intended seems to be almost decided upon. That, assuming the China-town to be practically rebuilt, with the precaution (let us say) of concrete floors, it will suon thereafter become as filthy and as dangerous to life as it is now, unless a continuous ther the blocking up of those outfalls had any influence upon the district where the pestilence reached its worst.

That it seems strange, when so much stir was made about the abominable smells on the Caine Road levels, no mention was then venchanfed about the stopped-up drains below.

That the whole question of drainage will certainly have to be thoroughly investigated, as I have before suggested, as part of the radical reform needed in the sanitary condition of the Colony.

That the appointment of Mr R. K. Leigh on the Sanitary Board is an earnest of the Governor's desire to vigorously thrash out Deaths ....... 0 this ambject.

That Mr Leigh's pamphlet on the Cooper-Chadwick system of separate drainage, published in November 1888, although passed by with scant attention by the Government, is a paper which deserves the most serious consideration in the light | under treatment is 252 as against 230 for of known facts.

The Chamber of Commerce have elected a successor to the Hon, Thos. Whitehead in the Legislative Council, and the choice has fallen upon Mr A. MacConachie, of the firm of Mesers Gilman & Co.

That Mr MacConachie may not have time or opportunity during his short tenure of the members have expressed their opinion very generally that the interests of the Chamber will be safe in his hands.

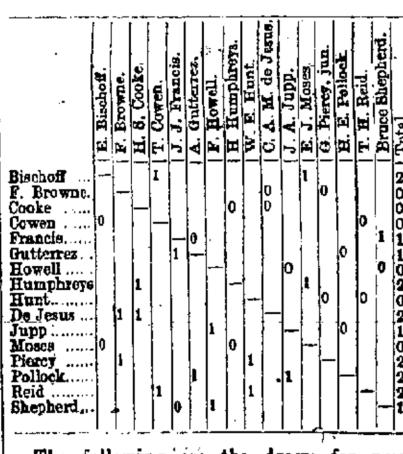

That the Post Office people are at it again, and this time it is short-paid letters which form the subject of approyance.

That in most civilised places a short-paid letter is delivered by the postman with other letters upon payment of the shortage, but they do things differently here. That the forms necessary for unearthing and gaining custody of a letter for which a few cents are to pay, are many and complicated,—they are published in the official Gazette, but are totally unknown by the

I have little doubt, Mr Editor, that your paper, and other local journals for that matter, have a temporarily increased circulation: but you are not on that account, going to raise the price of the subscription. Your correspondent 'X' mentions having given ten cents an ounce for Permanganate of Potash. He was let off cheaply, although he was then giving twopence halfpenny for what would cost about a half penny in England. I have quite recently bought some locally, and have had to give more than four times 'X's ' price. If 'Shopkeeper ' says such prices are legitimate or warranted then all I can say is that he deserves the contempt to which he so hotly objects. The one example I have given must suffice. THE BAUTERIA OF WATER. The Literary Digest gives the following summary of an article by M. L. Grimbert in the Revue Encyclopedique (Paris) :- 7. It is not so very many years ago that the only method of determining the purity of water was to subject it to chemical analyais; but water may afford no indication of the presence of mineral salts, nor even of organic matter; it may, indeed, present all the appearance of distilled water, and be declared by the chemist to be of equal purity, but may, nevertheless, on investigation by the bacteriologist, be found to disease-germs. Before submitting a sample of water to bacteriological analysis, the first point to be attended to is to heat the bottle in which it is to be tested to a temperature of 212° F. to destroy any germs it may contain. The sample must then be examined at once for its bacterial contents, because multiplication is extremely rapid. Each microbe thus isolated begins to multiply at once, and to give rise to spots in the gelatin more or less apparent, and of form and aspect varying with the species. These are called colonies. After a certain time, there will be as many of these colonies in the gelatin as there were individual microbes in the cubic centimeter of water. This system appears much simpler than Pasteur's, but it has some serious drawbacks. The gelatin is liable to thing frightful, being a mass of matter, blood, liquefy at a temperature above 82°, and some microbes have the property of liquefying gelatin.

From experiments made by Miquel, it appears that the number of microbes in a given sample of water increases with its impurity, and that the water, whother of rivers or of springs, is found most impregnated during the rainy season. Ice is found to be impregnated with the microbes that were in the water; most bacteria, whether pathogenic or not, being capable of withstanding a great degree of cold. But the number of microbes is a matter of little significance in comparison with their character. The enormous rapidity of increase, under favorable conditions, is such that if pathogenic germs are present, their number is a matter of only secondary consideration. THE PHYSIOLOGY OF A SNEEZE.

The most eminent physiologists, says James W. Barrett, differ on the subject of sneezing. The process of sneezing seems to be similar to that followed in, coughing, with the following, among other distinctions: (1) it is entirely involuntary; (2) it is caused mainly through stimulation of the anterior portion of the nose, stimulation of the posterior portion generally resulting in coughing; (3) the forced expiration is, if anything, more marked than in coughing; (4) the air in persons with normal palate (and spart from voluntary efforts modifying the act) is driven entirely through the mouth; that is to say, the palate is probab. ly pressed firmly back against the pharynx so as completely to cut off communication with the nose. The peculiar noise made in specifig is probably produced by the impact of the imprisoned air on the back of the hard palate, combined with certain modifications of the shape of the mouth produced by movements of the tongue and lips. In coughing, on the other hand, it would seem that the communication between the nose and throat is not necessarily cut off, and that the air sometimes through the nose as well as the mouth, and that special movements of the lips and tongue are certainly different, i not absent altogether. The mouth is generally opened more widely in coughing, and the noise produced by a cough is very different from that produced in sneezing. The one is laryngeal in the main, the other is chiefly buccal.

It is possible that the glottis has nothing to do with sneezing, and that the obstruction is entirely pharyngeal. If, however, there is a closed glottie, it is probable that the mode in which it is opened in the two cases is somewhat different. Coughing has, at all events, sometimes, a definite object to serve. It serves for the removal of irritating particles from the sir-passages, and It is quite likely that the glottie may be differently disposed in sneezing. Hence, the absence of glottic noise in specing. The statement that the blast of air in sneszing is driven through the nose has originated, I think, in the following manner: When people sneeze, they feel first a profound irritation in the anterior part of the nose. If this persists, then follow some long and deep inspirations, then a violent expiratory affort with possible closure of the glottis or some part of the pharynx; the obstruction is suddenly overcome, and the sir expelled through the mouth with the characteristic noise. Usually there follows almost immediately a gush of watery fluid from the nose, which is evidence of increased accretion.

Now, putting these facts together, we see that those who first described the process of sneezing confused, as usual, inference and fact. They knew that coughing, at all events, served the one purpose of removing foreign bodies from the air-passages. They inferred justly or unjustly that sneezing was adapted to remove foreign bodies from the anterior portion of the nose by means of the blast of air. They felt the irritation of the nose, and found that aneezing was It is admitted, in principle, that all usually followed by relief. Without ex-

THE CHINA REVIEW.

THIS Review, which was intended to meet the wants of many students of Chinese gaused by the discontinuance of ' Notes and Queries on China and Japan, has reached its Twenty-first Volume. The Review discusses those topics which are uppermost in the minds of students of the 'Far East' and about which every intelligent person connected with China or Japan is desirous of acquiring trustworthy information. It includes many interesting Notes and original Papers on the Arts, Sciences, Ethnology, Folklore, Geography, History, Literature, Mythology, Natural History, Antiquities,
